

50TH ANNIVERSARY PLANS

A REVIEW OF SITUATION FILLED WITH SENSIBLE VIEWS.

Why Not Have National Government Take Charge of Care of Entire Celebration.

The Sunday Phila. "Record" contained an article on the preparation for the 50th anniversary celebration by George E. Vickers, adequately covering the situation. The article was illustrated with pictures of Dr. and Mrs. Granville and of the college buildings that will be used for the entertainment of distinguished guests. Among other things the following matters were presented:

The two classes of visitors, the veterans and the high officials of the governments of States and of the nation, as well as the foreign diplomats, being thus provided for, there would be no necessity of further concern over the question of caring for the guests, if these were all. Along with the 40,000 veterans will come a certain number of friends and relatives, enough to make the figures mount into thousands; and in addition to them will be the miscellaneous visitors from all parts of the country, and especially in great force from various sections of Pennsylvania itself, as well as from the bordering States of Ohio, Maryland, Delaware, New Jersey, and New York. They will come and swell the assemblage to tens of thousands—it has been estimated the celebration will draw 200,000 persons—and the vortex like condition in which the town of Gettysburg and its immediate vicinity will find themselves, unless adequate means shall be devised for moving the crowd, will be something frightful to contemplate.

A few facts with reference to the capacity for guests of Gettysburg itself will suffice to show how helpless it will be if left unaided. Its population, according to the census of 1910, is 4930, but it is believed, through the establishment of several important manufacturing concerns there since, which brought within its confines a number of new people, along with its natural growth, that the number of inhabitants is now between 4500 and 4800. There are about 1000 residences and buildings of all kinds in the town, and its prosperity is seen in the fact that there is not one known unoccupied dwelling, a very unusual thing for town of its size.

The Board of Trade made a partial canvass of the town recently with the object in view of ascertaining its capacity for the entertainment of guests. It has seven hotels, which can accommodate in the aggregate about 2000 persons. In addition between $000 to 10,000 more can be cared for if left to themselves to search for lodgings in private dwellings and boarding houses in haphazard fashion. If arrangements for their care shall be made in an orderly way in advance, under a system that will set the citizens to work to do their best, and the public buildings are pressed into service, such as school houses and the court house, with those who have charge of the celebration furnishing cots, fully 15,000 people can be accommodated in Gettysburg with board and lodging, including those cared for by its hotels. This is the consensus of opinion of the members of the Board of Trade.

There are also additional resources that may be employed to accommodate more. The National Guard of the State has tents sufficient to shelter 10,000 persons. If the Guard itself will not be in attendance and needing the tents they might be loaned and pitched on vacant lots, of which there are a number in the town, bordering on streets with sewer connections, which could thus be made available for the number of visitors mentioned.

The arrangements and capacity in sight for veterans and miscellaneous visitors are: First, the United States camp, limited to veterans, 40,000; second, the hotel and private dwelling house capacity, 15,000; total, 55,000. If the tents of the National Guard could be borrowed and the vacant lots occupied they would meet the requirements of 10,000 more, making the civilian accommodations 25,000, which, with the United States tents for 40,000 veterans, would afford provision for 65,000.

But with a civilian influx of even 50,000 more than this number the town itself, with all its brain-racking and striving to meet the demands of the occasion, will be helpless.

A partial solution of the problem may be found, if State aid is lacking, in the help that may be afforded by the transportation companies. Two railroads enter the town over their own tracks, the Philadelphia & Reading coming in by the way of Harrisburg and Mt. Holly Springs, Cumberland county; and the Western Maryland from Baltimore and Hagerstown with western connections. The great Pennsylvania system, the numerous branches and divisions of which mark the railroad maps of Pennsylvania, Maryland and the near Western States like the tracks of a centipede, uses the 16 miles of line of the Western Maryland, to connect with the historic field. It will pour the visitors into the town by two lines, its Lancaster-Frederick division, extending from Lancaster to Frederick, Md., traversing all that country between the Susquehanna and the Potomac via York and Hanover, and its great Northern Central line, extending from Sodus Point, on Lake Ontario, in Northern New York, to Baltimore, and bringing down the upper New York continent as well as the hordes of visitors from Williamsport, Lock Haven, Northumberland, Lewisburg and from all the other towns and countryside of the Susquehanna Valley and Northern Pennsylvania.

The fact that the celebration comes in the first rush of summer vacation traffic does not help the situation any, so far as the railroads mentioned are concerned, for it is a season when their passenger facilities are always taxed to the limit.

One of the officials of the Pennsylvania passenger department discussing the celebration the other day, said arrangements would be fully completed in time to enable the company to care for the immense bulk of traffic it expects to handle.

"The Pennsylvania Railroad Company," said he, "finds its gateway to Gettysburg at Hanover, on its Frederick division, 16 miles east of the battlefield, by the Western Maryland. We have ample track connections at Hanover, so the movement of trains may be handled promptly and expeditiously. This is the regular route for travel to Gettysburg by way of our lines. Through trains carrying large parties or organizations are run to Gettysburg without change at Hanover. While from Pennsylvania Railroad territory east of Gettysburg this is the regular route, from points north and west of Gettysburg the trains may be run from Harrisburg over the Northern Central Railway to York, and thence over the Frederick division which crosses the Northern Central there, to Hanover for the same connection with the Western Maryland."

There are no figures available yet to indicate how much traffic the roads will be called on to handle, but from the interest manifested by the various State Commissions it would seem that a very large percentage of the old soldiers in each of the States will attend. The Pennsylvania is already making preparation to take care of the large volume of traffic anticipated and will be ready to meet the requirements when the occasion arises.

The Reading and Western Maryland Railroad Companies are likewise wide awake over the probability of a huge congestion of humanity in the town and of the necessity of adopting the best means at their command to help relieve the situation. They have only one recourse, however, and that is to arrange their schedules so as to run trains at short intervals in the hours when the visitors would naturally desire to withdraw from the fatigue of the day and seek refreshment and repose for the night.

With reference to the part the railroads will take in trying to help out the situation, Theodore Vorhees, first vice president of the Reading, discussing the matter with the writer, said his company would be prepared for the emergency when it arose.

"We shall see to it that there will be enough trains to handle the crowd," he said, "up to the full capacity of the service within which we can move trains with safety."

Mr. Vorhees was of the opinion that many of the visitors would go to Gettysburg merely for one day, arriving in the morning and departing in the evening, a consideration not taken account of to any extent by the people of Gettysburg and others who fear a great congestion.

As to the Western Maryland line the officials of that company have a full comprehension of the prospective situation and are making their plans accordingly.

Adjutant General Thomas J. Stewart, in his office at Harrisburg, bent an anxious eye on the writer when he questioned him on the problem of caring for the multitude during the four days' celebration.

"It is a question," said he, "that I have not seen solved by anybody. To care for the multitude that is certain to crowd into Gettysburg will be a task that will tax the ingenuity of the most resourceful of minds. I think if the Government itself could be induced to step in and take charge from the opening day on July 1 to the close on the evening of July 4, it would settle the question. I do not see how else it is to be settled."

General Stewart paused a moment in deep thought, his eyes fixed meditatively on the wall, and then resumed:

"There is another thing that is to be considered. We have, through our State Commission, invited the thousands of veterans of other States, both Union and Confederate, to attend the celebration. It must be kept in mind that the moment those thousands of guests step aboard the train in their home Commonwealths to come to Gettysburg they are the guests of Pennsylvania. This State is responsible for their reception, their comfort and their care. They must be received and conducted to the quarters assigned to them, and many of them will be old and feeble and cannot be jostled and tossed about in a great crowd. It will require drastic regulations and a strong detail of volunteer guards of our own National Guard or of United States infantry to properly keep the roadways open and protect and escort the State's guests as they move to and fro to their assigned places in the exercises. The National Government can do this part of the work better than any other agency, and, in my judgment, steps should be taken with that object in view. The thought that will attend will be unprecendented and if there is not to be a great congestion and a swamping of the town and its vicinity the situation should be fully anticipated and provided for."

Gettysburg is 161 miles from Philadelphia by the Philadelphia & Reading via Reading, Lebanon and Harrisburg, and 128 miles by way of the Pennsylvania.

The battleground lies much nearer Baltimore than Philadelphia, the distance from Gettysburg to the Monument City by rail being only 71 miles. The Western Maryland, therefore, the picturesque route into the Blue Ridge, will have the shortest haul, by less than half of that of the Reading and by a little over half the mileage of the Pennsylvania, taking as starting points the cities of Baltimore and Philadelphia. As the Western Maryland starts at the nearest large city, South it will not likely be taxed as the other two lines will be with their trainloads from the North. The Western Maryland will undoubtedly have a monopoly in bringing in the "Gray" in contradistinction to the "Blue" on the occasion, the former, of course, all hailing from that part of the U. S. lying at and south of its two important terminals, Baltimore and Hagerstown. Gettysburg is only 40 miles from Hagerstown by this line, a fact that may be an important consideration in solving the question of providing for the guests, as Hagerstown could handle 20,000 persons.

With the Western Maryland's Gettysburg division striking off from its main line from Baltimore to Hagerstown at Emory Grove, a few miles west of Baltimore, and extending up into southern Pennsylvania and thence bending around into the upper Cumberland Valley in Franklin county and by a wide detour to the western terminus of its main line at Hagerstown, and with the Reading coming from Harrisburg by way of Carlisle Junction, and the Pennsylvania with its two lines entering Gettysburg through York and Hanover, the problem of preventing congestion at Gettysburg, by moving the overplus to and from the half a dozen or more of the larger towns that lie within a radius of 40 miles of the place and which could care for at least 40,000 might be solved. York and Hanover are both towns very much larger than Gettysburg, and the one is only 16 miles away, while the other is less than twice the distance. Carlisle and Harrisburg can be easily reached, the latter city by both the Reading and by the Pennsylvania over its Northern Central. Hagerstown can be made to serve equally well by the Western Maryland, as also Waynesboro and Chambersburg. It is the belief of those who have given thought to the matter that the railroads, better than any other agency or than all others in sight combined, can furnish the real solution to the problem of disposing of the multitude that is anticipated.

Colonel Lewis E. Beidler, secretary of the Pennsylvania Commission, having charge of the arrangements for the veterans, who has been very active in the lines of duty imposed on the Commission, says there is no basis on which one may form a correct judgment as to attendance at the celebration.

"The people of Gettysburg," he said, "making their estimates of the number of the civilian visitors from their experience on occasions of the past are themselves much at variance, their guesses ranging from 25,000 to 200,000 and over."

If one may form a judgement, however, from past notable events in connection with happenings linked with the civil war in which the Blue and the Gray have commingled, and take the occasion in New York of the funeral of General Grant, he is apt to come to the conclusion that the Gettysburg celebration will be an affair unprecedented in Pennsylvania in the magnitude of the crowd in attendance since the days of the Centennial in Philadelphia, in 1876.

At the Grant funeral, the ceremonies of which were held in the largest city in the United States, in August, 1875, that city experienced a dearth of food supplies consequent on the enormous influx of outsiders, that placed her on the verge of famine. For two or three days the city's own residents could hardly obtain enough to eat. The influx of the outside world was beyond anything of the kind New York ever experienced, and had the crowd remained two days longer the city would have been swamped, and traffic have almost come to a standstill.

A little reflection over the Gettysburg event should be enough to convince anyone that those in charge of the celebration and the people of that town particularly, are going to have on their shoulders a stupendous responsibility—a task to put them on their mettle. State assistance through the present Legislature should be invoked and systematically applied if the affair is not to run the risk of becoming a huge fiasco to the discredit and shame of Pennsylvania.

A CONTEMPTIBLE OUTRAGE

CIRCULATING A PRIVATE LETTER TO DISCREDIT THIS TOWN

The Letter was in Answer to One Offering Larger Inducements.

Reports have reached Gettysburg from time to time that there is a disposition around headquarters of the Pennsylvania Commission in charge of the 50th Anniversary of the Battle in Philadelphia, to seize every imagined chance to pillory some citizen of Gettysburg for some fancied or invented reason. In no case which has come to our ears has the truth been given and no better evidence is wanted of incompetence and inefficiency than these attempts to show up Gettysburg, to divert attention from the wasted years for preparation by the head of the Commission.

Last week the fourth one of these incidents came to light. Citizens who had been to Philadelphia came back with the report that a lady of Gettysburg had asked ten members of the Union League $12 a day each for five days. It was said that the proof of this was a letter from the lady which had been shown around accompanied with demonstrations of the awful extortion.

It is surprising that men, doubtless men who have hoped to deserve the title of gentlemen, should commit an outrage of injustice and discourtesy upon a lady of Gettysburg by circulating a private letter without informing themselves of the circumstances under which it was written and a Philadelphia lady to whom it was addressed could have furnished the truth of these circumstances.

As early as May, 1912, the Gettysburg lady was written to by a Philadelphia lady saying that a party "was anxious to know if you have made positive arrangements for his party for 1913, there will be ten and he wants everything first class. If it is necessary to advance a little money he is ready to do so, but wants to be sure that everything is arranged in advance. Can't you take this party? You know they are willing to pay for it; they want the table set."

In September, 1912, another letter came from the Philadelphia lady asking "what would be charged per day for the accommodation wanted?" The Gettysburg lady replied that she feared to undertake to give the accommodation according to the wants expressed and advised that a better plan would be to room with her at $1 a night and take meals at a hotel at 50 cents a meal.

In January a letter came from the same party who had written the former letters, saying "the ten gentlemen who wanted to visit your city thought you would take just their party and give meals and all they wanted, everything the best and expected to pay anywhere from ten to fifteen dollars a day each. Seven of the party are past sixty and they are all very rich. It wouldn't suit them to live that way for even a few days. They will either rent a furnished house and take servants and everything up or go in a private car and live in it."

The Gettysburg lady realizing that the demands asked of her would necessitate an experienced city cook with trained servants and advance furnishings of an elaborate kind to prepare for such a bunch of rich sports, finally consented to accept what was being thrust upon her, not what she had asked or suggested, and named $12 per day, expecting to make extensive preparations to justify the taking in the service that would be given.

The Gettysburg lady and the people of this town were astonished to learn that a private letter written under such circumstances should have been exhibited at a club and used for purpose of misrepresentation of the people of this place, and all who are guilty of a part in this contemptible outrage owe both the lady and this community an apology, and those connected with the commission who are unable to do the apology act deserve to be removed.

School Directors' Convention.

The School Directors of Adams County held their twenty second annual County convention last Thursday and Friday, there being an attendance of 135 of the 171 directors in the county. Thursday morning's session was opened by prayer by Rev. L. Dow Ott and Dr. J. A. Singmaster made the address of welcome calling attention to the lack of ornamentation about rural schools, so that they are often uninviting and the need to correct this. The delegates attending the State Convention, Robert C. Miller of Gettysburg; E. L. Eckert of Oxford; John D. VanDyke of Butler; A. L. Wagaman of Mt. Pleasant and Clayton Berkheimer of Oxford made their reports.

"Compulsory School Education" and "Economy in School Affairs" was discussed by the directors.

Dr. R. L. Watts, Dean of Agricultural College, State College, made an address on subject of "Rural Progress" declaring that the greatest occupation was farming and best crop children. He was of the opinion that farming should be taught in all rural schools. He told of a teacher who replied to a boy that intended to be a farmer, that he ought to want to be something else, and declared that any rural teacher so expressing her or himself was unfit for the job. Farming should be encouraged as representing one of the highest types of living. He was of the opinion that the teaching of farming would better meet the practical needs of the children than study of classical languages.

Thursday afternoon the directors first discussed "Medical Inspection of Schools" and "The Solution of the Out House Problem."

Officers were then elected as follows: Pres., Rev. W. K. Fleck of Fairfield, Vice Pres., Calvin Hamilton of Gettysburg and Elmer D. Buckey of Littlestown; Sec., John A. Culse of York Springs; Treas., E. L. Eckert of Oxford, and Auditor, I. L. Taylor of Gettysburg.

Hon. Henry S. Houck, Secretary of Internal Affairs, made an address in which he plead for the old fashioned education, for the fundamentals, an understanding of grammar, arithmetic and how to read and write. He advised that when a good teacher was found to keep him or her and that policies should not be allowed to prevent what was best for the schools.

Dr. Watts made the second address of the afternoon on "Agriculture in the Schools," showing the advantages to be gained by the teaching of agriculture and giving list of text books to be used.

The Thursday evening entertainment consisted of an address by Hon. Henry Houck on "Travels in the Orient," with music by the Arendtsville Glee Club.

Friday morning session was opened with prayer by Rev. J. B. Baker. The report of the treasurer was then heard. The directors discussed "Holiday Vacations" and question of a week vacation at holidays carried by a vote of 19 to 27. "School Visitation by Directors" was next discussed.

Delegates to next State Convention were chosen as follows: Samuel R. Bair of Conowingo, Reuben D. Schwartz of Mt. Joy, W. W. Neely of Tyrone, Norman Berkheimer of Oxford, and Luther T. Cashman of Straban. The alternates were Wm. Van Scoyoc of Littleton, Harry Group of Tyrone, Geo. R. Roussong of Bendersville, Eli Garretson of Butler, and I. L. Taylor of Gettysburg.

Prof. Chas. A. Albert, Bloomsburg State Normal School, in his address said that 4 per cent. of the children go to college, 11 per cent. only reach the high schools and 85 per cent. spend but five years of their lives in school. The big problem for school directors is to give the 85 per cent. the most out of their limited time at school.

Supt. James M. Sweeney of Elk county, spoke on "The Building of a Teaching Corps," and declared the three essentials to be considered in selecting teachers were strength of character, devotion to duty and scholarship.

At the closing session on Friday afternoon, Supt. Sweeney spoke on "Supervision and Consolidation" and Prof. Albert on "The Relation of Public Schools to the Community."

The report of the Obituary Committee was adopted as follows:

Generosity of School Children.

The boys and girls of the public schools of Gettysburg responded splendidly to the celebration of the founding of the Child-Welfare movement on Monday, Feb. 17, which occurred 16 years ago in Washington. D. C. The teachers impressed upon the children the good work that is being done along many avenues for the welfare of children and a better and happier childhood. A penny remembrance had been suggested by Mrs. Wm. Arch. McClean, Pres. of the Parent-Teachers' Association, to be sent to the headquarters of the Child-Welfare and outpoured a string of pennies that was truly wonderful. High School sent $2.45, Meade School $3.95, and High Street School $4.11, a total of $11.51, a most creditable showing for the school children of the town.

Comparative Digestibility of Food

Made with different Baking Powders

From a Series of Elaborate Chemical Tests:

An equal quantity of bread (biscuit) was made with each of three different kinds of baking powder—cream of tartar, phosphate, and alum—and submitted separately to the action of the digestive fluid, each for the same length of time.

The relative percentage of the food digested is shown as follows:

Bread made with
Royal Cream of Tartar Powder:

100 Per Cent. Digested

Bread made with
phosphate powder:

68 1/4 Per Cent. Digested

Bread made with alum powder:

67 3/4 Per Cent. Digested

These tests, which are absolutely reliable and unprejudiced, make plain a fact of great importance to everyone: Food raised with Royal, a cream of tartar Baking Powder, is shown to be entirely digestible, while the alum and phosphate powders are found to largely retard the digestion of the food made from them.

Undigested food is not only wasted food, but it is the source of very many bodily ailments.

THE SECRET OF LONG LIFE.

Do not sap the springs of life by neglect of the human mechanism, by allowing the accumulation of poisons in the system. An imitation of Nature's method of restoring waste of tissue and impoverishment of the blood and nervous strength is to take an alterative glyceric extract (without alcohol) of Golden Seal and Oregon grape root, Bloodroot, Stone and Mandrake root with Cherrybark. Over 40 years ago Dr. Pierce gave to the public this remedy, which he called Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. He found it would help the blood in taking up the proper elements from food, help the liver into activity, thereby throwing out the poisons from the blood and vitalizing the whole system as well as allaying and soothing a cough.

No one ever takes cold unless constipated, or exhausted, and having what we call mal-nutrition, which is attended with impoverished blood and exhaustion of nerve force. The "Discovery" is an all-round tonic which restores tone to the blood, nerves and heart by imitating Nature's methods of restoring waste of tissue, and feeding the nerves, heart and lungs on rich red blood.

Mrs. Dorn.

"I suffered from pain under my right shoulder blade also a very severe cough," writes Mrs. W. Dorn, of New Brookland, S. C., to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y. "Had four different doctors and none did me any good. Some said I had consumption, others said I would have to have an operation. I was bedridden, unable to sit up for six months—and was nothing but a live skeleton. You advised me to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. When I had taken one bottle of the 'Discovery' I could sit up for an hour at a time, and when I had taken three bottles I could do my cooking and tend to the children. I took fourteen bottles in all and was then in good health. My weight is now 167 pounds."

CANAL NEARLY COMPLETED

WATER WILL FLOW THROUGH CANAL THIS YEAR.

First Ship to Go Through on Oct. 5 —400th Anniversary of Balboa's Discovery of Pacific.

Union of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans by means of the Panama canal, is to be the supreme American achievement of 1913.

"Ninety-three per cent. completed," was the report made by Col. George W. Goethals, the engineering head of the enterprise.

Completion of all excavation necessary to open the canal by June 1 is the estimate in the hands of the President. Flooding of Culebra cut, the most stupendous task of the canal construction, is planned for July 1 without celebration. In July, August and September, it is estimated, sufficient water will flow into the lake reservoirs at the Gatun and Miraflores locks to enable passage of the first vessel—a Panama railroad ship—through the entire canal on Oct. 5, the four-hundredth anniversary of the discovery of the Pacific by Balboa. The canal will not be thrown open to the commerce of the world until after the dedication on Jan. 1, 1915.

The accomplishments of 1912 on the isthmus and his hopes for the future were given as follows by Colonel Goethals.

"During the year of 1912 the Gatun dam was virtually completed and at the close of the rainy season Gatun lake had risen to a height of 57 feet, or within 80 feet of the maximum which it will be allowed to attain. The dam held back this volume of water without leakage.

About 30,000,000 cubic yards of material was removed from the keystone of the canal—Culebra. Of this 5,000,000 yards were due to slides in Culebra cut. But slides will cease when the canal is completed and dynamite blasting discontinued.

"There remains to be excavated about 25,500,000 cubic yards. But only 8,000,000 need be excavated before the canal can be opened. It is hoped that the last steam shovel can be removed from the cut by July 1. Then the dike at the Obispo, which holds the water of Gatun lake out of the cut, can be removed and the water will flow. Remaining excavation necessary can be accomplished by steam dredges.

"Less than 5 per cent. of the total excavation and concrete works is unfinished. At the present rate both will be finished and all gates and machinery for one set of locks will be installed by September. Then, if the water in Gatun lake is high enough, the first ship can be put through one complete set of locks."

During his visit to the zone, President Taft unequivocally indicated that he favors honoring Balboa by having the first ship sail from ocean to ocean on Oct. 5—exactly 400 years after the Spaniard sighted the Pacific from what is now the terminus of the canal. The President plans to issue a proclamation before March 4, fixing this date for the event. The water is to be turned into Culebra cut on July 1. Establishment of a civil government in the zone, to replace the military regime incident to actual construction work by the army and navy engineers, will precede the formal and informal opening ceremonies.

The following is estimate of work: The six locks are about 70 per cent. completed; excavation 95 per cent. completed; back-filling of the Gatun dam 98 per cent. completed; concrete work of the Gatun locks—the Atlantic entrance—94 per cent. completed; the Gatun dam over 97 per cent. completed; the spillway of the Gatun dam nearly 94 per cent. completed, and Culebra cut 94 per cent. completed.

At Balboa the railroad terminal and shops are being enlarged. There a mountain of rock 1200 feet high is being razed for material for the breakwater. Three islands reaching into the Pacific are being joined by the breakwater. On two are being built concrete forts for 12-inch guns. On the other is the quarantine station. On the farthest island, the sentinel of the canal in the Pacific, is a fort. Powder magazines are being built, hidden earthworks installed and other fortification work begun.

All working records are being broken to complete the canal this year, and the canal, begun in 1904, will cost the government complete about $365,000,000.

The People of Gettysburg.

"What use for the rope if it be not flung Till the swimmer's grasp to the rock has clung?
What help is a comrade's bugle blast,
When the peril of Alpine heights is past?
What need that the spurting paeon roll,
When the runner is safe within the goal?
What worth is eulogy's blindest breath,
When whispered in ears that are hushed in death?
No, no, if you have but a word of cheer, Speak it while I am alive to hear."

In the accounts I have read of the battle of Gettysburg, I have never yet seen any reference made to the very important part that the people of that beautiful little city took in that memorable struggle; none the less important that it occurred on the day before the battle. I refer to the enthusiastic reception which the people of Gettysburg gave to our cavalry as we reached the city on the day before the fight, and the wonderful effect of that reception on our troops.

It will be remembered that Lee's army was encamped some miles from Gettysburg. When our cavalry advance reached the city and passed on through the streets, men, women and children crowded the sidewalks and vied with each other in demonstrations of joyous welcome. Hands were reached up eagerly to clasp the hands of our bronzed and dusty troops. Cake, beer, milk and wine were passed up to the moving column, as we marched slowly along the crowded streets; doors, windows and balconies were filled with ladies waving their handkerchiefs; bright eyes and smiling faces looked down from open windows upon the troopers, with now and then a matron trying to smile through her fast falling tears as she remembers her own boy in the army.

Altogether it was one of the most touching, spontaneous and heartfelt demonstrations my eyes ever witnessed. So vividly was the scene impressed upon my mind that every event, every incident of that march through the streets of Gettysburg remains with me after the lapse of over twenty-five years, as though it were but yesterday.

I remember, as I rode beside our column, how eagerly a citizen and his wife who stood at their front-yard gate pressed me to come in and have something to eat, and when I declined they cried: "Can't we do something for you?" Hardly knowing what to say to this hearty proffer of hospitality, I replied: "You will have an opportunity to do something for us tomorrow;" and the lady's startled look as she asked: "Why, will there be a battle tomorrow?"

I remember a balcony where stood a bevy of young ladies dressed in white, waving their handkerchiefs, and I verily believe that the effect upon our troopers would not have been intensified had they been veritable angels, waving their white wings and beckoning them on.

In order to understand something of the effect that this unique demonstration had upon our cavalry that day, we must remember their history up to that memorable time. A few years before, these bronzed and hardy cavalrymen were the boys and young men of the North, living in happy homes, surrounded by friends, with father and mother and sisters and sweethearts, and all the dear delights of happy, peaceful life. But war came, and with the generous eagerness of youth they responded to the country's call for soldiers and in a day, as it were, without preparation, these lads, who were as guiltless of any knowledge of a soldier's hard duties as children, were brought face to face with stern, cruel, relentless war. Then came months and months of hard, laborious duty, amid danger and deprivations, with the course and meager soldier's fare, learning discipline and all soldierly duties in the face of an enemy who were better prepared, better drilled, and with more experienced leaders.

Then followed, as might have been expected, humiliating defeats. Again and again the enemy taught us our lack of skill and discipline; harder yet was the facing of sickness, disease and death in the swamps of the Chickahominy; and hardest of all to be pushed back day after day to the shelter of our gunboats on the James River. O! it was a hard, hard school in which our cavalry lads learned their lesson; but they learned it. Learned at a fearful cost, but under circumstances that gave them muscles of iron and hearts of oak. They had learned to use carbine and sabre and pistol, and to use them effectually. They had learned to obey orders, the most difficult lesson to the volunteer soldier. They had acquired confidence in their arms, confidence in themselves, confidence in their leaders; and that summer's day when we reached Gettysburg, there was not a cavalryman in our ranks who did not feel that he was the equal of any other cavalryman, whether in the blue or the gray. The careless, happy lads of a few years before had been transformed into stern, resolute, veteran soldiers.

During all those dark days in Virginia they had not seen a woman's smile or been cheered by one word or glance of her approval. But now all is changed: we are in grand old loyal Pennsylvania. We had reached Gettysburg. No more hard tack and salt pork, but great big loaves of bread and golden butter. We had been used to seeing ladies scowl as we rode along the Virginia pikes, until we expected nothing else; and now to see but smiling faces and approving glances was like manna to our hungry souls. Small wonder that those girls waving their handkerchiefs to our unaccustomed eyes was a vision of almost celestial beauty.

I am not giving you romance, kind friend, but sober facts as they appeared to us that day at Gettysburg. Not to have been affected by the kindness of those people under any circumstances would have been impossible. To receive such a reception, under such circumstances, as we did was an inspiration. It awoke every feeling of chivalry in our souls. It recalled to memory all the dear and loving ones we had left at home. It brought back with overwhelming force that love of country that had first impelled us to enlist. It inspired to heroic deeds. The men who lay down on their blankets that night were capable of grander, nobler deeds than they had yet performed.

I remember that night of having charge of a reserve picket post out on a turpentine near a farmer's house, and how he invited us all in to supper, and wanted the man "out on post" to come in too; and when I explained that he was "on duty," the kind soul offered, cannot properly masticate solid foods and digestion is often upset—they do not receive the needed nourishment to make strength and preserve health, but if aged people everywhere could only realize the strength-sustaining nourishment in Scott's Emulsion they would take it after every meal.

AGED PEOPLE

It possesses the nourishing elements of cod liver oil, the vital powers of the hypophosphites of lime and soda and the curative qualities of glycerine, also perfectly combined that nature immediately appropriates them to create strength—nourish the organs and build the body. It relieves rheumatism and ailments due to declining years. It adds to the span of life.

Scott & Bowne, Bloomfield, N. J. 12-63 to take his place while he came and ate his supper; and how the same old farmer came out and chatted with us till late at night.

I am getting old now, and the war memories are fading from my mind, but every little event of that day seems to remain. Even in my dreams that night I saw my sisters waving their handkerchiefs; and another, not a sister, standing under the maples by her cottage door, waved her handkerchief—God bless her; she is the mother of my children now.

Well, morning came: the bugles sounded in the clear summer air, and we awoke ready, as never before, to do or die. Shots were heard at the outer picket line—few at first, then more and more in quick succession; then the sharp crack of the carbines told that our troopers were at work. I will not attempt to describe what followed. We know that Heth's division of infantry advanced to take the position occupied by our cavalry. But Buford was there—Buford, the grand old cavalry leader—and he had decided the night before that that position must be held for our own infantry. Can it be done? If within the power of human effort, it can. There is a spirit in man that at times lifts him above his ordinary plane, and he becomes capable of all that is grand and heroic. Such a spirit animated our cavalrymen that morning a spirit aroused by the demonstrations of the people of Gettysburg yesterday, and today finding expression in deeds of heroism. It was a grand spectacle, that of this little band of troopers, disputing foot by foot the advance of a large force of infantry, steadily, undauntedly and for hours holding them back. At last our infantry arrive, not one moment too soon. Our brave lads are almost overwhelmed; so close is that terrible battle line upon them, that the gallant Reynolds falls in the very act of bringing his men into line; but the position is ours, and the victory at Gettysburg is made possible. Pleasanton says that Buford was the hero of that battle; that the position he held was of vital importance. That he held the position was due to the fact that his cavalry fought that morning as never before. I repeat, it was an important service that the people of Gettysburg rendered in that memorable struggle.

Late Capt. 8th Ill. Cavalry.

Free Roads for the Farmer.

There seems to be considerable objection to the passage of the $50,000,000 bond issue for road purposes especially in the agricultural districts. This opposition arises to a large extent, no doubt, from the fact that the people do not fully understand it. The bond issue will not impose any tax upon any individual in the state, except stockholders in corporations.

There is now no State tax on real estate although many people imagine that there is. The expenses of the State are borne almost exclusively by the receipts from corporate taxation and the bond issue will be cared for in the same way. It will not cost a farmer in the State a single cent, but, on the other hand, will give him most excellent roads to his county seat and to other places in his county.

When the people fully understand conditions and realize what they are receiving in return for the expenditure of the money derived from the bond issue we feel quite certain that they will regard this important matter from an entirely different view point. Surely if the Commonwealth wants to give us good roads with money paid into the State Treasury by the large corporations of the State our people would be most foolish to offer any objections by their votes.

SPEECH OF HENRY C. NILES BEFORE THE PEN AND SWORD OF GETTYSBURG COLLEGE.

Message from Life of Lincoln to Give Enthusiastic, Popular Support to Woodrow Wilson.

The color of the ground was in him,
The red earth.
The tang and odor of the primal things—
The rectitude and patience of the rocks:
The gladness of the wind that shakes the corn:
The courage of the bird that dares the sea:
The pity of the snow that hides all scars:
The loving kindness of the wayside well:
The tolerance and equity of light,
That gives so freely to the shrinking weed
As to the great oak flaring to the wind—
To the graves low hill as to the Mattern-born
That shoulders out the sky.
And so he came. From prairie cabin up to Capitol.
One fair ideal led our chieftain on.
Forever more he burned to do his deed With the fine stroke and gesture of a king.
He built the rail-pile as he built the State.
Pouring his splendid strength through every blow,
The conscience of him testing every stroke.
To make his deed the measure of a man.
So came the Captain with the mighty heart:
And when the step of earthquake shook the house, Wrestling the rafters from their ancient hold,
He held the ridge-pole up and spiked again
The rafters of the Home. He held his place—
Held his long purpose like a growing tree—
Held on through blame and faltered not a praise.
And when he fell in whirlwind, he went down
As when a kingly cedar, green with boughs,
Goes down with a great shout upon the hills,
And leaves a lonesome place against the sky.

This picture of our great Lincoln, by Edwin Markham, the seer and bard, is accurate in every line.

Its truth is graphic because it is felt to be a character sketch of our best possible selves.

Lincoln and all the truly great, have gripped the imagination and admiration of the world, not because they differed in quality from their fellows; but because they were fine samples of common virtues.

Lincoln would have been a nobleman just the same had he never been President; or been unknown outside New Salem, Illinois.

Not the least blessing of his life is:
That Providence placed this best specimen of the common American upon the pedestal of a Nation's crisis; to be an inspiration and encouragement to the average man.

If not in the same degree, every man knows he can and ought to be of the same quality as he at whose shrine the world burns incense.

Everyone foresees the genius to be true and kind; and has the same commission to dare and do for justice. He lived uprightly, loved mercy and rendered unto every man his due. This was the substance of every son of honest blood. Lincoln had no unusual opportunities. The dictionary, Shakespeare and the Bible are always obtainable and thorough study and appropriation of them will go far towards producing a cultured mind and simple elegance of speech.

His training for the bar was unassisted reading of Blackstone, Chitty, Greenleaf and the Illinois Statutes.

All of his educational opportunities were unusually meagre.

His retentive memory: logical faculties, trained by experience and self-discipline: ready wit and personal magnetism: were factors in his professional as they were in his political success. In none of these rested the real foundation of his eminence.

He was a great lawyer chiefly because in his own thought, purpose and act, he was a just man. A just man is he who in motive and practice appreciates and endeavors sincerely to act upon the Golden Rule. Such an one, with ordinary mental ability in America, will necessarily become a more successful lawyer than one more brilliant and learned, without the ethical sense which teaches what under any set of circumstances a rightly minded person ought to desire that other men should do unto him.

Our changing laws are merely the attempt, often blind to approach more nearly this ideal of social life. If all men knew and lived the Golden Rule, there need be no municipal laws or means for their enforcement.

Because some citizens do not know or will not obey the Golden Rule. Society must compel all to act as they ought to act willingly. He who refuses voluntarily to do unto others as if ethically enlightened, he ought to desire others to do to him, must be coerced thereto.

Other things being equal, he will be the best lawyer who in his own thought is true to the ethics of Jesus.
He will intuitively know what ought to be the law: which is likely to be the law, or will be by and by.

Ours is not a Christian Government, in the sense that as an ecclesiastical system or creed Christianity or any term of it receives any peculiar recognition.

The only proper sense in which ours may be denominated a Christian Nation is: That the spirit of Jesus has at last become so dominant and pervasive, that although the majority are orthodox believers they are such practical deers of His will that they require their government to do unto the Atheist and Jew as they would wish the Atheist and Jew to do, were they in the overwhelming majority.

The American people, have so assimilated the ethics of Christ that under their government Christianity has no more legal status or right than any other religion or no religion.

Lincoln was a great lawyer and patriot because he was a great Christian in the sense that he had clear vision of and sincere purpose to practice the Golden Rule which is the true basis and end of the law of a wise self-governed people.

He belonged to no church, professed no belief in any formula of doctrine, joined in recitation of no creed, nor bowed at mention of the sacred name.

His soul responded to the spirit of Christ and he meekly patterned his life on His. He said not "Lord, Lord!" but he did His will.

This was the chief characteristic of his greatness as lawyer, patriot and man. This made him a sincere and logical believer in Constitutional Democracy.

Popular self-government rests upon the will of the majority. It has always been ephemeral, it can in the nature of things never be permanent unless limited by constitutional restrictions. A constitution is the moral law of a State. National morality consists in obedience by the majority to its own self imposed fundamental law.

Every self-controlled man is a constitutional democracy of one. At some time, consciously or not, he practically organizes himself into a constitutional convention. He deliberately covenants with himself that he will not bear false witness, commit adultery, steal, murder or yield to covet-ousness; no matter how unreasonable and in restraint of natural freedom these self-imposed constitutional restrictions may seem to be in time of temptation. Success or failure in individual self-government will be as,
and in proportion as, he is true to his moral law, his constitution, when interest and passion urge to its violation. All men good and bad obey the Decalogue when they want to. The moral man the self-governing individual denies himself the thing he wants presently, because he is faithful to the rules adopted by him when there was no emergency of hunger, desire, fear, love or hate.

Burning with illicit love he keeps his chastity according to his constitutional vow not to commit adultery.
Grieved by avarice, when honesty seems not to be the best policy, he enjoins his greed with assertion of that section: Thou shalt not steal. When hatred fills his heart and it seems right and safe to slay his foe, his hand is stayed by recollection of his vow to do no murder.

Lincoln was such a man. His career was possible and the nation's success has been, because the majority of the citizens have been self-restrained individuals and therefore the defenders of Constitutional Democracy, the moral law of free government.

Constitutional government is peculiarly an American institution: the foundation of our equal laws and the protection of our personal liberty. Our theory is: that the whole people have set limitations to their otherwise illimitable power. They have said: There are certain things we will not do no matter how much in times of passion we may desire to do them.
The result is, that no citizen can be deprived of his constitutional rights even though all the rest of the State may desire. This is the highest development of government. So long as the people retain a tender civic conscience and the power of self-control no right will be wrested from the weakest or most universally hated citizen. The people yield, not to the one objector, but to themselves. They will bow to their own resolution deliberately recorded on the calm heights of wisdom at a time when reason was unclouded by prejudice, partisanship, love or hate. This is constitutional liberty: the fruition of the toil and thought, and hope and battle of the centuries.

To this highest of all governmental ideals Lincoln was faithful. In the crisis of the rebellion and the preceding excitement he retained his own self-control and steadied his fellow countrymen.

His first just view was: that slavery was a national sin to be removed at the joint expense.

Only necessity brought him to the Emancipation Proclamation, as a war measure.

It was all the more effective because not premature. When the time was ripe his was the instant courage, against all timorous counsels, to link his name with an immortal deed.

That proclamation did more than a duplication of armies. It secured the first condition of success. It put the nation right: recovered it from its false position and set its feet upon the moral law. It was in harmony with divine justice and therefore irrepealable. It was one of the high points of American history. Its only fellows are the Declaration of Independence and the adoption of the Federal Constitution.

The Tree of Liberty blossomed in the Decree of Freedom; and, as if the nation had been exhausted, during the fifty years succeeding there seemed no vitality for another flower.

Slavery had been abolished: but crafty greed will not be regenerated by executive order. The power of the slave holders was broken but the same kind of cunning avarice in other form captured the government.

A new cult of Mammon worship developed and under the misleading banner of "Business Interests" went into politics committing the sacrifice of prostituting the very party of Lincoln to the service of special privilege and injustice. So insidious was this control that only recently have the people come to the realization that the government, as well as trade of America, is in the grip of an absolutism such as was undreamed by the slave oligarchy.

Currency legislation, the banking system, and tariff duties so high as to be a distortion of any honest protective theory, have been the means whereby the reward of general industry has been diverted from the earners and poured in golden streams into favored purses. Similar influences dominated, have been allies of these new and more arrogant overlords.

The time server, the timid, those who participated in the loot and those who hoped to have lowered at the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, plastery and dulcimer and all the usual protectionists' insistent music and have worshiped the image set up by the oppressors of the people.

The degradation has been such that we were given over, it seemed hopelessly, to avowed plunderers, rather than risk a chill to our gigantic and voracious infant industries.

So complete is the moral demoralization that even now when the lovers of equal justice have been heartened by the election of their champion to the presidency, there impends a proclamation of our dishonor, to the whole world.

The Panama Canal has been built at the public cost. It is proposed that a small part of the people, the capitalists engaging in the coasting trade, shall be given for their private enrichment free of charge these expensive facilities, publicly provided.

The election of last November was evidence of general disgust of the overgrown pampered favorites of government. The proposal to create a new parasite ought to evoke nothing but indignation; especially when the defenders of the economic injustice of subsidizing coastwise ship owners do not hesitate at international bad faith.

England claims, with at least a reasonable basis, that we are under treaty bound not to do this. Whether we are so, precluded or not, we are obligated by all that is honest and brave and of good report to submit any such difference of construction of contract to an impartial court.

Advocates of this violation of solemn treaty, in defense of the treasured right to do injustice at home, are regardless of our honor abroad; and are contemptuous of the moral law and Golden Rule. Some of them pretend to the name of Democrat.

It is manifest that such are blind to the vision of Woodrow Wilson the seer; which it is the hope of true democracy will be made a reality under the guidance of Woodrow Wilson, the president.

The fruition of this hope depends upon us, as factors of public opinion.
The general attitude of the country is hopeful. There is a crystallization of sentiment favorable to justice, similar to that which rallied to the support of Lincoln. Even some of the beneficiaries of injustice profess to have seen the light.

Philadelphia has begun to think and is supporting the brave independent Mayor; and juries have begun to render verdicts according to law and evidence.

Pittsburgh begins to prophesy.
Gang leaders have matriculated in the School of the Prophets; and by vociferous protestation of tardy devotion to social and industrial justice are attempting to divert public attention from tariff inequities and preserve the party square and complicated election laws for the protection of bosses, old and new.

Lincoln's qualities would have been ineffective except for sustaining public opinion. If public opinion is now sufficiently true to support President Wilson in the impending struggle with vested wrong we may see and have a part in, another emancipation.

Unjust special privilege will be curbed; constitutional democracy be re-established; limitation to one term will emancipate the president, and in large measure, the nation from the dominance of the spoils politicians and the foundations laid of a permanent international court, which shall make international war as impossible as revenge for our Supreme Court makes armed conflict between our States unthinkable.

The new President has all the qualities for leadership in the renaissance of legal liberty. The chief element needed for complete success is enthusiastic popular support. This will add strength to his strong arm, courage to his brave heart and serene confidence to his clear brain. The present crisis is a parallel to that of Lincoln's time.
Will we be as true as he and the men of 50 years ago?

making the same serious error. They attribute their mysterious aches and pains to overwork, or worry, perhaps, when all the time their rheumatic pains, backache and bladder irregularities are most probably due to weak and ailing kidneys. If you are ill, if your kidneys are out of order, profit by this Gettysburg resident's experi-

THE NEW SPRING SUITS FOR WOMEN ARE HERE

There never was a season where smart style in Suits was as becoming. The new length coats take the eye at once, and new lines and features in tailoring excite feminine interest and pleasure. Skirts are as slender and straight as ever, in some there is a slight fullness by novel pleat effects. The trimming has a gracefulness and airiness seldom seen in past seasons--NOVELTY, RATINE & SILK--the beauty of certain Button trimming--and the quaint idea in Collar & Cuff finish. Everything about our New Suits is daintily tailored, a touch here and there which make them stand out in style as high grade no matter how low the price. The materials are Bedford Cords, Repps, New Fancy Suitings, Serges &c. Suits for the little woman or the large odd size--with every between size.

SPRING COATS

Never a time in which there was so much style in a top coat as this season. We are showing many more Spring Coats than we ever did before in a Spring season.

Prepare Now for Fancy Fall Fruits.

The greatly developing interest in orcharding all over this State has been stimulated by the organization of many local and county horticultural associations, and these, in turn, have made many exhibitions of their local fruits, which have been remarkably commendable. State Zoologist J. A. Surface has said that he is anxious to see Pennsylvania fruits take the rank they deserve, and they can be best advertised through worthy exhibitions. He says that the first essential step in exhibiting fruit of prize taking quality is to grow FANCY FRUIT. To do this it is necessary to commence now. Trees must be properly sprayed while they are yet dormant, this season. It is impossible to grow strictly FANCY FRUIT on trees that have not been sprayed during the present dormant season. If they are infested by San Jose scale or certain other pests.

It is proved by experiments described in a recent Ohio Bulletin and others, that trees sprayed with lime-sulfur solution, in accordance with the directions of Pennsylvania's State Zoologist, H. A. Surface, give finer fruit in appearance and in much greater quantity, than those sprayed with other preparations. Not only should they be sprayed before the leaves appear, for the sake of destroying the pests upon them, but they should also be pruned properly. Trees that are too tall should have the tops cut out to make them low; those that are too bushy should be opened to let in air and sunshine and give better colored fruits; those that have too much wood or brush should be pruned back to give fruits of better size and color. It will be impossible to take prize winning fruits from trees that need to be pruned. Contrary to the popular opinion, pruning can be done at any time during the winter. It is not necessary to wait until a special spring season for this.

In addition to pruning the trees, they should be well fed or fertilized. Nitrate of soda is one of the quickest acting and best spring fertilizers for trees. Persons who wish to grow fruits of large size, will be justified in using a few pounds of nitrate of soda around each tree. Barnyard manure is a good fertilizer, however, as are the other forms of nitrogen fertilizer.

Plans should be made for the proper cultivation of orchards either by direct cultivation, followed by a nitrogen cover crop, or by a heavy sod mulch system, perhaps supplemented in some cases by manuring and fertilizing.

The kind and quantity of food to give a tree depends upon its condition, as shown by its growth. The stronger or larger the growth of the tree the less is the need of nitrogen fertilizer, and the larger and more poorly colored will be its fruits.
